Turning Off Gas, Electric and Water in an Emergency is Easy

After an earthquake or anytime you smell gas, electric wires are exposed or arcing, or a water pipe breaks, it is easy save your home from fire or water damage. The first thing you need to remember is 'Your Safety is Number One'. Do not attempt to turn off gas, electricity or water if you are putting yourself in danger. If you can do so safely follow the guidelines below.

Gas Shutoff

1. Locate your gas meter and shut off valve. Your gas meter is usually on the side of your home and will look like the picture shown or may be a smart meter. Both will have the same kind of shut off valve.
2. Only if you detect a strong smell of natural gas (similar to the smell of rotten eggs), hear a hissing sound, or see the meter dials spinning when no appliance is being used, you need to turn off gas at the meter. Always keep a gas wrench nearby where it can be easily accessed. A standard large crescent wrench, pipe wrench, or special utility wrench can be used.
3. Turn valve in either direction one-quarter turn to shut-off your gas as illustrated. It is important NOT to turn the gas back on yourself. Call PG&E and they will turn it back on for you after checking for leaks.
4. Many appliances have smaller shut offs located near the appliance. If you can safely isolate a leak and shut these valves off, do so first. Contact a professional to fix any leaks before turning valves back on again.

Electricity Shutoff

Circuit breaker boxes come in a variety of shapes and sizes depending on the age of your home. For newer homes, you may have a main shutoff box outside the home and another inside the home or garage for individual sub-circuits. In an emergency, you may need to turn off the power from the main breaker box on the outside of the house.

1. Locate the main breaker box and open the cover.
2. To shut off everything, turn off the sub-circuit breakers first and then the main breakers.
3. If it is safe, you may turn them on again by turning on the main breaker first, then all the sub-circuit breakers.

Water Shutoff

1. Locate your main water valve which will normally be located near the road in a square cement box. Lift the cover off with a large screw driver or special tool to expose the shut off valve and meter.

Your home may also be equipped with a house main shut off valve near the front of your home. This can be used instead. It will look similar to a faucet handle but be in-line with a pipe at both ends.

2. To turn off your water at the meter, use the same diagram as for the gas meter. Always keep a wrench nearby where it can be easily accessed.

A standard large crescent wrench, pipe wrench, or special utility wrench can be used.

Post this article in your garage or keep a copy in an outside shed for reference in an emergency.

Alma de Bretteville Spreckels (1881 - 1964) was a woman to be reckoned with. In her lifetime she managed to bring the works of sculptor Auguste Rodin to the United States and have the California Palace of the Legion of Honor built to hold them.

The six foot tall Alma became an artists' model and posed for the Goddess of Victory statue at the top of the column in Union Square in San Francisco. She lived in the grandest home in San Francisco. She invented the "garage sale" and provided funds to help fight two World Wars by conducting sales in her mansion. She was able to obtain items for the garage sale from heads of state, presidents and others.

She married Adolph Spreckels and because he was the head of the Spreckels Sugar Company, she often referred to her husband as her "sugar daddy". Having a love of art all of her life, she put her husband's money to work.

She purchased a number of Rodin's art works directly from the artist and had them displayed at the 1915 Panama-Pacific International Exposition (PPIE). In 1921, ground was broken for the Palace of the Legion of Honor Museum in Lincoln Park, San Francisco. As Alma Spreckels envisioned it, the building is an almost exact, full-scale replica of the French Pavilion from the 1915 PPIE, which in turn was a three-quarter scale version of the Palais de la Legion d'Honneur in Paris, designed by George Applegarth and H. Guillaume. At the close of the PPIE, which was located just a few miles away in the current Marina district of S.F., the French government granted Spreckels permission to construct a permanent replica of the French Pavilion which still stands today.

Alma continued her charity rummage sales during the Great Depression years; this time expanding to thrift shops, which were eventually given over to the Salvation Army to operate. She also continued her devotion to the arts, obtaining more and more works for her museum as well as coordinating and partially funding the development of the Maryhill Museum of Art in Maryhill, Washington, named for her friend Samuel Hill, after his death.

Big Alma

Alma de Bretteville Spreckels

Spreckels formed a new charity, the San Francisco League for Servicemen, which gathered supplies for the Army and Navy. She even donated her vast Sonoma County ranch to the Army to use as a recreational facility.

Alma Spreckels' last major project was the construction of the San Francisco Maritime Museum. When it opened in 1951, her collection of model ships, displayed at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 - 40, was shown as the main exhibit. However, she had a feud with the museum founding director, Karl Kortum and as a result, did not receive much recognition for her role in the Maritime Museum's establishment.

Alma died a recluse at the age of 87. She spent a lifetime seeking acceptance by San Francisco society. Never receiving that acceptance, she left instead a legacy of art, museums and good works.

Cupertino Restaurants are ReThinking Disposable

The City of Cupertino is reducing waste and litter in our community by working with our local restaurants to reduce the use of disposable food ware. Through this new free program, our local businesses will take stock of the products and practices used in their food service and look for ways to reduce the use of disposable products, thereby reducing waste and saving money. Want to help spread waste reducing practices in Cupertino? Encourage your favorite Cupertino spot to get involved! For more information, see rethinkdisposable.org or contact the City at 408.777.3354 or environmental@cupertino.org. Want to reduce waste in your own home? Check out epa.gov/waste for ideas of what you can do to make less waste and conserve resources.

Couldn't Be Easier to Get Rid Of Household Hazardous Waste!

Have old household cleaners, cans of paint from projects past, old thermometers, or other potentially hazardous items that can't be thrown into the trash? The City of Cupertino offers FREE home pickup of these special wastes through the Waste Management (WM) At Your Door service - simply call 800.449.7587 to make an appointment. You will receive a kit in the mail including a special plastic bag into which you will put your wastes. Simply set the bag out on the day of your appointment. Ask for multiple bags if you have a lot of wastes - take a look around your home and get rid of all your household hazardous waste with one appointment!

Note: PLEASE call 800.449.7587 and cancel if you cannot keep the appointment. No-shows still cost the provider money and hurt the efficiency of our program!

A Drought Tolerant Garden is a Beautiful One

Right now is the time to transform your garden into a beautiful, drought tolerant landscape that will use less water and save you money. The City of Cupertino is adding a rebate of $1 per square foot onto the Santa Clara Valley Water District's existing $2 per square foot rebate, up to 1000 square feet. This means you could be getting $3 per square feet back for converting your yard to drought tolerant plantings. All rebates dispersed through the Water District. Call the Water District at 408.630.2554 for more information and to set up your pre-inspection.

New projects only.

Turning Text Into Maps

The City of Cupertino Planning and Public Works Departments have worked in collaboration with Cupertino GIS Department to turn two online text documents into interactive web maps, which are available to the public. These web maps makes it easier for Cupertino residents to see what projects are happening in the city.

THE DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITY MAP AT

highlights the planning department's development projects. Updated monthly, the map displays current projects color coded by whether the project is under construction, under review, or has been approved, but not built.

shows current and upcoming closures in our city. This map is updated nightly and includes closures due to the 2015 - 2016 pavement management program, block parties, and any other special events.

The City of Cupertino is always looking for new ways to make our data more available. If you have any suggestions on what you'd like to see an interactive map of, send your requests to GISTeam@cupertino.org
